

Links & anchors

External: the example site, a reference link to the same site defined at the bottom, an autolink in angle brackets <https://example.com/docs>, and a bare address that becomes a link on its own: <https://example.com/report>. So does an email address: contact@example.com.

Internal: jump to the bottom section. The link works inside the PDF, and the viewer's Back control returns you here.

Reference links keep long URLs out of the prose, which matters in a paragraph like this one, where three sources are cited in a row: the first, the second and the third.

A section in between

Enough prose to push the target onto a later line: the anchor of a heading is its text in lower case with the spaces turned into hyphens and the punctuation dropped, so “The bottom section” becomes #the-bottom-section.

The bottom section

You made it. Now go back to the top.
